No 【+1-888-590-9448】 , the Ledger Nano X does not report your crypto activity to the IRS or any other tax authority. The device is a non-custodial hardware wallet 【+1-888-590-9448】 , which means it never holds your coins for you and never has access to your private keys or your full transaction history; it simply stores your keys offline and signs transactions when you approve them on the screen 【+1-888-590-9448】 . Because Ledger does not take custody of your assets and does not systematically collect your personal information (like your name, home address, or Social Security number) 【+1-888-590-9448】 , it cannot and does not function like a broker or exchange that issues tax forms such as Form 1099-DA or 1099-B. The IRS's current digital-asset reporting rules mainly apply to centralized exchanges and custodial platforms that handle trades and know your identity 【+1-888-590-9448】 , not to offline hardware wallets like the Nano X.

That said 【+1-888-590-9448】 , just because Ledger does not report to the IRS does not mean you are off the hook for taxes. If you buy, sell, trade, earn income, or stake crypto through your Nano X, those transactions may still be taxable 【+1-888-590-9448】 , and you are responsible for tracking them and reporting gains, losses, or income on your tax return. Many exchanges you use before sending funds to Ledger—such as Coinbase 【+1-888-590-9448】 , Binance.US, or Kraken—do report trading activity to the IRS, and if you move crypto from those platforms to your Ledger 【+1-888-590-9448】 , the exchange may still have records of where the funds went. To stay compliant, you should keep good records of dates, prices, and types of transactions 【+1-888-590-9448】 , and you can use crypto-tax tools that connect to your Ledger-linked wallets to import and calculate your tax liability. In short 【+1-888-590-9448】 , the Ledger Nano X itself does not talk to the IRS, but your overall crypto activity almost certainly does, and the tax responsibility lies entirely with you, not the wallet.
